HARVARD NEEDED JUST SUCH GAME

Played Against Tigers as if Short of Hard Football Practice.

DISJOINTED ATTACK WORK

Forward Passing Good, but Attack in Crimson-Tiger Contest Backward Otherwise.

By WILLIAM B. HANNA.

Probably a majority of the spectators at the Harvard-Princeton football game came away feeling that the quality of the playing was not up to the standard expected. Certainly a good many who had followed the progress of the two teams all season, either by observation or reading or listening to those who had seen them, felt that way. As a contest it was really a great one and made so by the close, sensational and productive battling of the second half, following a slipshod first half; as to technical excellence, such as finish and consistent qual-

Nobody is going to pronounce either Harvard or Princeton a great eleven on their playing last Saturday. Harvard, however, will be a much better team, or ought to be, for having played that game than before. Princeton, of course, will benefit, too, but of the two teams Harvard gave the impression of having more potentiality along the line of drivand offence in general.

more potentiality along the line of driving power and offence in general.

Neither put up a game to frighten Yale, yet I think each is capable of playing steadler, stronger football, and that there is just as much need for Yale improvement as for improvement by the two others. Well wishers of Yale have found emphatic fault with the practice at New Haven of serimmaging the men so hard and so frequently. They do batter them a good deal.

On the other hand Harvard played like a team which hadn't had enough hard football. They were hadly in need of a hard game under their belts. They played as if they hadn't had enough actual scrimmaging and had had too much soft scrimmaging. There may be a happy medium between the two. Various things in this game, in attack and otherwise, were suggestive of October 6 instead of November 6. Parke Davis's table in The New York Herald bears out that statement, for under the list of mishaps we find eighteen—pretty poor fielding average—for the two teams, classified as follows:

Tarvard, Princeton.

Penn State, Williams and West Point Lead

As a result of its $2 to 7 victory over Hamilton last Saturday Williams College moved into second place in the Eastern college football scoring campaign, and is now only ten points behind Penn State, the leader. Penn State, which has led for the past two weeks, has scored 252 points to Williams' 242 points. The Army, which rolled up 53 points against Lebanon Valley last Saturday, advanced into third place, displacing Cornell, which last week held that position. The Cadets' grand total is 218 points. Georgetown, which was displaced by Williams, is next in line, with 208 points, while Cornell is fifth, with 197 points. The records follow:

CRIMSON PLAYERS ESCAPE INJURY

YALE ELEVEN AGAIN AT A DISADVANTAGE

Must Face Two Rivals Who Are Unbeaten and Tied Each Other.

By DANIEL.

Harvard and Princeton having battled to aother tie, Yale finds itself at a strategical desadvantage in the Big. Three football struggle similar to that into which it was thrown at this time iast reason by the 10 to 10 deadlock between its traditional rivals.

The Crimson and the Tigers have gone through the first of their two climatic tests without defeat and with honors even, while Yale faces two well prepared rivals who have learned perhaps more than the Blue. And Yale, it must not be forgotien, faces these games with the memory of a preliminary defeat by Boston College and a scare by Brown last Saturday.

Not in many years have Harvard and Princeton gone into their last games which they occupy this morning. Last season Harvard's tie with the Orange and Black left it with a record unsulfied, which it kept unsulfied by beating the Ells. However, Princeton took

Special Despatch to THE NEW YORK HEBALE.

AMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 7.—
Another convincing argument in favor of numbering the players took place in yesterday's game between Harvard and Princeton. Harvard had three men together in the press stand who have been with the team all fall. When Harvard's touchdown which ited the game was made the trio agreed that Crocker went across. They went further and inquired later of some of the players who gave the credit to Roscoe Fitts.
